You'll Never Work Alone: Collective Infrastructures in Moving Images demonstrates the possibilities and challenges inherent in collective cinematic and artistic work by presenting international and local perspectives from academics and practitioners. By linking practical examples and film theory approaches from Jakarta, Athens, Rome, Paris, Madrid, and Vienna, we aim to initiate an exchange of ideas on collective modes of production. The publication gathers together further reading and responses related to the event series "Collective Infrastructures," hosted by the Golden Pixel Cooperative (GPC) in 2019. In curating the series, the GPC borrowed Judith Butler's idea of considering collectivity as infrastructure. The focus lies on the specific infrastructure—social, material, visionary—of a collective association that has evolved or could evolve together through a community's practice.
